with the great Methodist organization, would have done well to have squelched the whole matter long since.

Our distant religious exchanges bring us nothing new. They seem to be edited by reverend gentlemen who are content with taking care of their own flocks without enlarging their spheres of usefulness. Why don't they, or some one of them, start a new idea?

A Russian General on the Eastern Ques-

General Fadejeff, a soldier and a writer of the Russian empire, who has given much attention to the Eastern question, has just published the second part of his work on that subject. According to the General's views the time for Russia to act has come. He says :- "Since the Crimean war we have been passive, and the consequence is that every great event that has occurred in Europe bas been turned to our disadvantage. All the world is against the Russians, and they can no longer trust to the chapter of accidents for the continuance of the influence they have hitherto enjoyed." The BOURBAKI AGAIN IN COMMAND. writer is no admirer of Germany, evidently, and falls to perceive that the interests of the two countries are in any way identical. Germany, he believes, will side with Austria should any difficulty between the latter Power and Russia ever arise; besides, he thinks that Austria has behind her a reserve of one hundred thousand Poles who could be drawn from Galicia in case of trouble. The true policy of Russia, according to General Fadejeff, is in a coalition of the Slavonic races and the abandonment by the Russian Court of its leanings toward Germany. We are of opinion that these views are shared by a large number of the prominent statesmen and officers of Russia, and that the present course of the Czar in the cultivation of friendly relations with the German Kalser does not meet with such favor among the leading men of the empire as his wisit to Berlin might imply.

THE WEEK IN WALL STREET has been one of great excitement and heavy losses to the frequenters of that vicinity. Hundreds of men who were rich last Sunday are poor to-day. We wonder if the Sunday sermons will be listened to any more earnestly. Dr. Talmage, of the Brooklyn Tabernacle, ought to repeat that discourse of his on the evils of stockgambling. Last week's incidents will furnish him with plenty of material to "point the moral."

the 25th of July next, why the injunction should not be made absolute.

The injunction is asked for on the grounds, among others, that the act of 1870, autho izing the joint companies to execute a lease, with the consent of two-thirds of the stockholders is unconstitutional; that the act, if constitutional, authorizes a lease to be made with a continuous and connected railroad, and the Pennsylvania Railroad is not such a connected and continuous road; that by no act of the Legislature can persons who own property be compelled to part with it without their full and entire assent, and without full and ample compensation being rendered.

GRAND OPERA HOUSE-"THE BOHEMIAN GIRL"-The season at this place of amusement closed brilliantly last night. An audience much larger than usual-probably one of the largest audiences of the season-witnessed the performance of Balfe's opera of "The Bohemian Girl." It is aimost unnecessary to say that Miss Rose Hersee's rendering of Arline was received with repeated applause. This is a character in which this charming actress is especially popular, and her singing and acting in it last night were alike admirable. Mr. Drayton, as Count Arnheim, made his last appearance on the lyric stage prior to his appearing in legitimate drama, singing, as usual, well. Mr. Howier was also excellent as Thaddeus, and Miss Fanny Goodwin's rendering of the Gypsy queen was most praiseworthy, and received hearty applause. The entire opera was, in fact, a complete success throughout. The ballet was good and was rendered, and the other pleces which made up the evening's entertainment were all excellent. On Monday night the Opera Boufe Company appear in "La Perichole" for the last time prior to their departure for Europe, and almee and Silly will perform together in their favorite piece. On Monday next the "Three Hunchbacks" will be performed at Hooley's Academy of Music, Brooklyn.

AN ABUSED ACTOR. .

Disgraceful Scene at a Theatrical Perform ance in Philadelphia.

A performance of "The Lady of Lyons" was given—or, rather, attempted—at the Academy of Musica Philadelpuia, on Thursday last. The Claude Melnotte was a Mr. John S. Estlin, an amateur, who recently had made his debut in "Romeo and Juliet."

recently had made his debût in "Romeo and Juliet." The Philadelphis Star thus describes the scenes that took place during the evening:—

The house was very full, the masculine element largely predominating. It was evident, from the expression on almost every countenance, long before the curtain rose, that they had come there for "fun"—that they had come to "guy" the hero of the play—and were prepared to carry hiarity to any wanton extent. But we must confess, with mingled feelings of shame and regret, that the scenes which followed far surpassed our anticipations. Any attempt to delineare them upon daper must necessarily fall far short of the purpose. To say that the conduct of a large portion of the assem-Any attempt to delineate them upon paper must necessarily fall far short of the purpose. To say that the conduct of a large portion of the assemblage was disgraceful is but to feebly characterize it. Coins were thrown upon the stage—balls of hlywhite were thrown upon the stage—balls of hlywhite were thrown upon the stage—balls of hlywhite were thrown that left a trail like a comet where they struck; carrots, cabbages and other vegetables were thrown; torpedoes were thrown; but the crowning indignity (aside irom the insulting cries) was the throwing on the stage a dead cat in the lass state of decombosition, in tact, falling to pieces, while the Pauline of the play was speaking in tones of beaulderment to her new mother. It is said that this foul indignity was committed by the son of a Chestaut street dry goods merchant. It is to be noped that the directors of the Academy will make some effort to discover his identity and punish him by proper legal means. Quito as bad as this were the cries, mainly from the balcony, which were kept up from the beginning till the end of the performance, with scarcely a minute's cessation. All of them were meant to be witty; all of them raised the most bolisterous merriment, rendering it impossible to hear even the orchestra; and all of them were either slangy or brutal. There were many present who did not sympathize in these outrages, who sought to check them by hisses, who cried, "Give the man a chance," and who in other ways displayed sympathy for those upon the stage.

The performance was diversified with speeches to to the audience, made by Mr. Estiin snd Mr. Vanhorn, one of the actors. One of Ar. Estin's speeches was the following:—

Having come here against my will, and not being in a physical condition to do want I would like to do, with your per-

was the following:—

Having come here against my will, and not being in a physical condition to do what I would like to do, with your permission I would like to close the play. I own up to it—under the circumstances—with the noise and confusion—I cannot go on. It would be impossible, even for a man in good health.

I have the courage to go on, but I don't wish to be insuited. (Cries of "What alia you, John?") My own judgment tells me I ought to quit. (Cries, "Oh, don't! Give us some more!") You cannot imagine the weak state I am in. (A voice—"Try Buchn!") It is only my desperate courage that drives me forward.

In a scene between Melnotte and Pauline, full

In a scene between Melnotte and Pauline, full of love and tenderness and Lake of Como rhapsody, a bunch of radishes came down with a thud at the lover's feet. The uproar that ensued was more like a scene in bediam than in the Grand Opera House of the second city of America. Pauline hastily quitted the garden, seeing it impossible to make any headway against the turbulence, and Mr. Vanhorn again came to the rescue:

I come to say a few words to the gentlemen in the house. The lady has refused to come ou the stage any more, as gentlemen throw things on the stage. The ladies and gendlemen with Mr. Estlin are as sensible as you are that he is open to ridicule; but while you are ridiculing him do not ridicule; but while you are ridiculing him do not ridicule them. (Cries, 'Who are you?'') Two months ago Mr. Estlin asked me to turnish the costumes for a play. The peopis were engaged. After two or three weeks he came to my house and I asked him to read me something.

He read Romeo. I saw it would be a farce, but it was too late, and we had a performance which I thought sufficient to conrince him be had no capacity; but as the man sand he had no fair opportunity I thought we would give him an opportunity to appear again to-night. If you wish to see the play continue you must show more respect or there will be no more performance to-night. (Hideous cat-calls and tumutuous barn yard imitations from the balcony.)

During this speech Mr. Vanhorn was interrupted after each sentence with cries of "Let the man advertise his business," "Shut up, old man," and other such yells.

Altogether a more disgraceful scene could not take place within the walls of a theatre. So much for the City of Brotherly Love.

Only twentyfour passed. This June the whole of the class exed, about one hundred, passed, as the examiamined, about one hundred, passed, as the examination was remarkably lax. Last Pebruary those who graduated were told that they would in June be entitled to all the privileges of the graduates, as there was no commencement in February. Now, in June, they are told that they must take the back seats, as this is not their commencement, and that they may consider it a great privilege that they are allowed to be present.

rachts of the New York Yacht Club fleet that yesterday morning lay at anchor inside of Sandy Hook. spxiously awaiting the hour of starting on the great ocean regatta, from buoy No. 5 to Long Branch and return, for the magnificent cup offered by Mr. Lester Wallack, met with a sad disappointment. Not alone were the hopes of these yachting gentlemen rudely dashed from them, but the pleasurable anticipations of brother yachtsmen who intended to accompany the racers over the course, and those of hundreds of fair ladies and prominent gentlemen that meant to scan, from the "beach at Long Branch," part of the contest, shared the same fate. The day proved auspicious in one respect, as Eolus, so often wanted to add to the yachtsman's real enjoyment, came to rents of rain, flerce squalls, thunder and lightning, and a thick fog that covered the sea as with a pall—they were deprived of the privilege of taking advantage of a wind that would have displayed good sailing and sterling seamanship. Hence as the full sail breeze was very acceptable, the Regatta Committee, at thirty-three minutes past twelve o'clock, on the anchorage ground, determined upon a postponement, and so decided.

At ten minutes past nine o'clock the weatherly steamer, Seth Low, with Mr. Philip Schuyler, and Colonel Stuart M. Taylor and others, left the foot of Desbrosses street for the Horseshoe, where it was expected to find the yachts entered for the race. The morning had been overcast and threatening, with the wind from east to northeast. Before leaving, the rain began to sprinkle and then pour in torrents, and the wind hauling to northeast made unmistakable signs of blowing fresh and everything and everybody grinned at the thought of a nautic fete where sail after sail would send quickening life into the finest modelled yachts of our most eminent builders. Before Staten Island was reached specu lation was running rife as to the abilities of the builders. Before Staten Island was reached speculation was running rife as to the abilities of the large schooners of the fleet in an ocean run, and the committee to a man fairly bubbled over with glee at the prospect.

The anchorage ground was reached about half-past two o'clock, and at this time it was blowling fresh from the southeast; but it shifted so continuously that, to use a familiar term, it was "bothering." The yachts found formed in a line, or nearly so, were the Wanderer, Columbia, Alarm, Tarolinta, Dauntless, Tidal Wave, Eva, Sappho, Flectwing and Palmer. These did not embrace the entire list of entires, as the lider, Rambier and Madeleine were among the number. The last named yacht because of an accident that happened her on the day of the anticipated regatta, 22d list, could not participate in the contest, and the lider and Rambier were passed at anchor of Quarantine by those on the Seth Low inproceeding to the Hook.

Matters so far as the weather is concerned, remained exceedingly unpheasant, and in a wicked raily of a squali with heavy rain, the Regatta Committee visited the yachts, giving to each captain an addenda to the original sailing instructions. At 11 o'clock it piped fresh from the east southeast and the steamboat proceeded to the buoy, No. 5 moored off the point of the Hook, where the imaginary line was half from the steamboat to the light on the Hook and across which the yachts would make a flying start. Single reef was bow taken in this wise followed the example. Although the surroundings were of the most unpleasant charac-

Commbia's mainsail, and the other yachts in this wise followed the example. Although the surroundings were of the most unpleasant character the sight of these racers was worthy the artist's pencil. At twenty minutes past eleven o'clock another flerce squall came on with thunder and lightning, and it began to thicken outside to such an extent that many of the yachts lowered away, and it now appeared for the first time that the race might be postponed, Acother raily of ran and at halfans, eleven the

At twelve minutes to twelve there were signs of fine weather, but for a few minutes only. The sappho now got under way, and the Columbia followed, each under foresail and jib only. At quarter-past twelve it became still thicker and thicker, when the committee decided to postpone the race.

So soon as this decision was arrived at the Sappho and Columbia were ordered back to the anchorage ground and the yachts notified. The committee then visited Mr. Wallack, who was on board his yacht Magic off the Long Branch dock, Sandy Hook, when he expressed much satisfaction and was delighted at the result, as they had only anticipated his wishes. At this time the steamoost N. B. Starbuck, designed to be the stakeboat off the West End Hotel, hove in sight out of the talckness occanward, and upon arrival at the committee boat Captain Brandau, an experienced tugboat master of fireen years, assured Messrs. Schuyler and Taylor that he had just returned from off Long Branch, and that it was so thick that one could scarcely see a hoat's

The Wanderer and Columbia were the first to return, and in their performance, snort as it was, the gentiemen on the committee boat were greatly nieased. greatis pleased.

The Regatta Committee will to-morrow decide when the race will be sailed.

Rules of the New York Yacht Club

TO THE EDITOR OF THE HEBALD:-There is a grave error in the report of the Committne sloops Addie and Vixen. By any fair saiting regulations the Vixen should be entitled to the prizes ulations the Vixen should be entitled to the prizes sailed for with allowance of time, the Vixen being the smallest sloop by about twenty tons, and being beaten eight minutes fifty-five seconds; but under these rules it appears that the Vixen has to give about three minutes to the Addle. Will the committee who framed these rules, please give their immediate attention to this matter, in view of the regatus to come off in a few days with these same sailing regulations? The Vixen asks for no favors, but would like to have fair play.
